

Buteo platypterus brunnescens

Puerto Rican broad-winged hawk

Family (Accipitridae)

Kingdom (Animalia)

Status (Endangered)

Description

The Puerto Rican broad-winged hawk is a dark chocolate brown, small hawk that measures approximately 39 centimeters (15.5 inches). It is smaller than the Buteo platypterus platypterus but larger than the Lesser Antillean subspecies. This is the darkest subspecies of the broad-winged hawk. In adults, the tail, broadly banded with black and white, and the rufous breast are characteristic.

Location/Habitat

It is mainly restricted to the mountain forests of the interior of the island, including the Cordillera Central, the Sierra de Cayey and the Sierra de Luquillo (El Yunque National Forest).
